Hi

I answer some of the honor culture stuff there

I just did this for you :)

Anyways

To answer some more of your questions, I personally was never in danger of honor killings in my family, they don't adhere to that form of thinking but the concept of honor is big in Asian communities because you are a representative of the collective (family) and anything you do harms the honor of that collective that's why South Asian immigrant parents are quite invasive in their American children's lives, not just for basic protective nature but to preserve the honor of the family you'll see in many South Asian families parents do things for the "sake of reputation" this is a product of honor culture
